Rangoli is a fine art, starting with the Indian subcontinent, in which the earth or ground is designed using For example, hoed rice, dry flour, shaded sand or flower petals. This is usually done during Diwali or Tehar, Onam, Pongal and other Hindu festivals in the Indian subcontinent. Designs starting from one age and then on the next are passed, keeping both artistic expression and convention alive. The reason for Rangoli is improvement and is believed to bring good fortunes. Outlines may also change because they reflect conventions, old stories and practices of interest to each region. This is usually done by young ladies or ladies. In general, designs are displayed at occasions, for example, festivals, favorable celebrations, marriage ceremonies, and other comparative breakthroughs and social events. In Nepal, colorful rangoli is produced using colors and lit up in the evening.
